night of the murder Mr. Hall and Mrs. Mills proceeded to the Phillips Farm by way of the Easton Avenue car. Mr. Kenny said that he was sure that Mrs. Fraley who lives a short distance away from the spot, knew something about it, and that she either did not want to get mixed up in it, or either the Officials were keeping her mouth closed. He said that nothing goes on about that vicinity but what Mrs. Fraley knows something about it.

Garry Kenny told Operative how Mrs. Hall's detective had asked him several questions one day while he was at the Phillips Farm. Kenny was under the impression that if the detective would look over the ground towards the Gibson house, that he would find the gun.

While in conversation, Garry Kenny advised Operative that New Brunswick, N.J., was a wide-open Town, and that the places were run under the protection of the cops, the cops getting a rake-off. Garry told Operative that the Officials, meaning the Mayor and Chief of Police, are regular sporting men. Garry said that New Brunswick was ^a great hang-out for the bootleggers, and upon Operative telling him that Operative could sell some whiskey, Garry told Operative to go and see a fellow by the name of Revelinsky, who is the main bootlegger in Town, and that his place is located on French St. a little away from the station, and that it is known as "The Bootleggers' Headquarters."

Operative left Garry Kenny at the corner of George & Main Sts, and remained in that vicinity for quite sometime, and then entered the pool-room at #425 George Street.

Operative while in the above mentioned pool-room mingled with several fellows of the Underworld who are dope runners between New Brunswick, New York, and Philadelphia.

At about 10.05 p.m. while Operative was returning to his room, Operative noticed a large closed car bearing New Jersey License #010-763 with a
